Hey, I'm Becky

Farm girl turned multi-million-dollar business mogul, Becky Hurley, is living proof that you can go through hard times and come out the other side. With a feminine flair to her gritty upbringing, she has set out to share a message of inspiration with the world.

With a passion for dreaming big and bringing dreams to life, she loves to shine the light of hope for those looking to build their future of personal and financial freedom. Having faced years of trauma in her childhood, Becky teaches her audience and community that you can experience hard and traumatic situations and still go on to create a happy, healthy and prosperous life. As the CEO of the Building Dreams Collective, a women's entrepreneur community, she encourages and inspires others to start their own healing journey to reach ultimate levels of success and happiness.

As the co-founder of a general contracting and real estate investing company with her husband Noah, Becky has been known to build subdivisions, commercial and residential rental complexes, and luxury custom homes. With an edge in real estate investing, Becky teaches her community how to make smart power moves and follow their dreams while maintaining wellbeing and fun.

Becky's education includes a Bachelor's of Science in Agriculture education from the University of Wisconsin- Platteville with a minor in Biology. She received her Masters Degree in Education from University of Wisconsin- La Crosse, along with extensive life experience with various companies, contractors, and individuals.

Becky enjoys homesteading, farming, reading books, and chasing her own next dream. Becky resides on her farm in Wisconsin with her husband, Noah, and two children, Tesla and Jace.
